Data Sharing and Discovery in NJ: njgin.nj.gov

Brian Embley, Geographic Information Officer, NJ Office of GIS

The most expensive portion of a GIS project is often the acquisition of suitable spatial data. Over the years this has fostered a tradition of sharing authoritative data among the GIS community. In NJ's GIS community the sharing of public data forms the Geographic Information Network (NJGIN) in which data stewards share their authoritative public content to be discovered and consumed by people around the world. The cornerstone of this federated network, njgin.nj.gov is the entry point to find shared data from public authorities at the state and local level. NJ's Geographic Information Officer will show how to find spatial data, how authoritative data is cataloged and even how to access remote sensed data such as imagery and elevation data at njgin.nj.gov.
